THE BAMBERG HERALD, Bamberg, S. C.

THE ANKLE SPECIALIST.

Short Skirts Bring Demand for a New Kind of Beauty Expert.

Ever since the slit skirt began two years ago to demand her services the ankle specialist has been kept busy rubbing encroaching fat away from nicely built ankle bones.

She is coining money, the ankle masseuse, and bids fair to supersede the Vernon Castles in making money out of feet.

Very quietly, almost secretly, the woman who sculpts shapeless ankles into shapeliness has plied her trade. At first she dared not display a sign, and was supposed merely to transform faces and impart to wrinkling hands and necks an appearance of youthful roundness. But you were told by your best friend that "the new beauty parlor had some one who could do wonders with ankles—take every once of flesh off them and in such a short time."

If your ankles weren't the bony kind you climbed the two flights, and were told when you reached the secret parlor within a parlor that the climb was just the thing you needed to reduce your ankles, but that you must be careful to set your feet down flat every time. When you ventured the observation that your foot could not possibly be set down flat in a high-heeled pump you were told that it could if you let it extend over the edge of the step.

Thereafter you religiously did so, finally acquiring the habit when going up stairs and with it a somewhat undesirable gait in stair-mounting. Did you ever stop to consider how beautiful a graceful woman looks when she is ascending or descending the stairs? I think that is largely responsible for the new custom of featuring staircases in American homes, and for the new custom of featuring in Italian gardens.

Safely up the stairs and in the dim little "parlor" the ankles are freed of their covering and critically examined by the expert.

After enduring the scrutiny for a few moments you anxiously inquire: "Do you think you can reduce them?"

"Why, yes," is the response, "but it will take a little time and some work outside you know."

The truth is, you haven't seen those ankles for several years, except in a mirror, but you recall with great distinctness how slim they were once upon a time. You thrill with the thought that the slimness may be restored.

The massage begins. Always the strokes are toward the calf. Being curious to know why, you are told that the upward stroke has a tendency to remove this fatty growth in the direction of the finger strokes. Of course, most of it is disposed of altogether by this means, but part of it is bound to find a lodging elsewhere, and it is much better to have it cling to the calf than to the instep.

You agree with this and sink back on your cushions to enjoy the manipulation of your superfluous tissue and to dream of the day when you shall be able to wear a frock that reaches just below the calf and which, with a heavy band of fur all around the bottom will have a tendency to make your reduced ankles appear still more reduced.

You carry with you from the "parlor" a rather formidable list of instructions for the outside work, but you faithfully perform the exercises recommended, always with visions of that fur-trimmed skirt in mind. As a child you slept in curl papers quite cheerfully the day before your birthday party and you haven't lost your femininity.

Now there are several ankle specialists in New York city, and a street sign may be expected any minute in Kansas City.—Kansas City Star.

YEAR SINCE BIG BATTLE.

7th army after the capture of Mondement, throwing the Prussian guard into the marshes of Saint-Gond. A stubborn resistance was offered there in the parts where defence works could be organized. Foch succeeded in taking these works in the rear, driving thousands of the guard so precipitately from the safe routes that they sank into the slime of the marshes. Several batteries of artillery were lost there and the 7th army took many prisoners.

The army of Langle de Cary, pressed by fresh troops brought from Belgium, maintained its positions, while Sarraill repulsed a violent attack by Von Heeringgen with the 16th corps.

As the result of the bloody battles of Dieulouard and Saint-Genevieve, Nancy was entirely disengaged and the Bavarians retired from Pont-a-Mousson into the Bois Le Petre, and Dubail in the Vosges progressed in the regions of Lineville and Baccarat.

September 10.

The morning of the 10th Gen. Maunoury was informed of the general retreat of the armies of Von Kluck, Von Buelow and Von Hausen. Varedes and Lizy-sur-Ourcq, evacuated in haste, were found crowded with German wounded. At Etrepilly piles of carbonized bodies were seen and dead and wounded were found in all the ravines and thickets, behind hedges and generally at every spot where the soldier seeks protection.

The British troops, continuing their pursuit, took thirteen more cannon and a few hundred prisoners and great convoys of supplies and ammunition. The army of Franchet d'Esperey, in spite of the fatigue of five days' fighting, after fourteen days' retreat, forced its advance and reached the line of Chateau-Thierry—Dormans, taking four cannon, 1,500 prisoners and a convoy of fifty baggage wagons. The losses of Von Buelow's army on this front were nearly equal to Von Kluck's.

Foch's 7th army, marching on Espernay and Chalons-sur-Marne, took prisoners and booty and supported the army of Gen. Langle de Cary by attacking in flank the forces of the Duke of Wuertemberg. Langle de Cary entered Vitry-le-Francois, which was full of wounded, and progressed toward Sermaize. The struggle between the crown prince and Sarraill was still undecided. At Thriaucourt Sarraill captured ammunition and on the other side of the Meuse the Germans completed the destruction of the forts of Troyon and attacked Sarraill's rear, but were repulsed. They tried to cross the Meuse lower down toward Saint Mihiel, but the French 3-inch guns destroyed each bridge as soon as thrown across.

The 11th the army of the Duke of Wuertemberg, vigorously attacked in the centre, gave way and retreated in disorder, while the armies of Von Kluck, Von Buelow and Von Hausen took up positions on the line of the Aisne.

This was practically the termination of the battle, though the army of the crown prince held its ground until the 12th, when it began to retire slowly.

The best estimates of the forces engaged placed the Germans at 1,275,000 and the allies at 1,125,000. The French are said to have lost 30,000 killed. The Germans left 50,000 dead, while 250,000 wounded of both armies were picked up during and after the battle by the allies' stretcher bearers. The number of prisoners taken is still unknown.—Correspondence Associated Press.
